Health insurance

Before arriving you should organize travel and a comprehensive personal health insurance for the duration of your stay.

Students must give ESSCA a copy of their contract with HotLine 24h for emergency.

Arriving in Shanghai

When coming to Shanghai, you will probably fly into Pudong International Airport which is located 40 km east of the city.

To transfer to the city centre, a taxi is the most convenient option but the journey can take up to an hour depending on transport and is likely to cost around 200 RMB. Airport buses are a cheaper option (20 RMB). They will take around 80 minutes. Airport Bus n° 4 will drop you to HongKou Stadium for 20 RMB. You could use a taxi after to get to your final destination. This service ends at 9:30 PM from HongKou Stadium and at around 11 PM from Pudong Airport. They are dispatched every 20-30 minutes.

A third option is to take the 'Transrapid' shuttle train ("Maglev train") from Pudong to Longyang Road station on Line 2 which, travelling at a speed of 430km/hour takes only 8 minutes! This train runs from 7 AM in the morning to 9 PM in the evening, with a single ticket costing 50 RMB. If you show your airplane ticket at the Maglev train ticket counter, it will only cost you 40 RMB per ride. From Longyang Road station you can easily navigate the underground system to reach the city centre or else take a taxi (about 50 RMB to the city center). Please find a tube map by following this link:

Alternatively you can search for accommodation on your own through websites such as

The monthly rent for a single room in a shared apartment is likely to be around €500 (3200 to 3800 RMB per month). This of course depends on the location, if the apartment is furnished, etc. Utility bills (gas, water, electricity, Internet) usually need to be paid separately. The majority of apartments in the above price range have all the necessary amenities including furniture, kitchen equipment, laundry facilities, Internet, TV, etc. In most cases, accommodation is available within walking distance or a short bus or taxi ride from the ESSCA Shanghai teaching site.

If you do not know a student you could share an apartment with please do not worry. We can send you a list of other students at ESSCA Shanghai you will be studying with to help you find someone. On websites such as SmartShanghai and others, there are many international students from all over the world looking for flat mates so it will be easy for you to find a room.

For more information, contact Christophe ROUILLON or Carole ZHU.

Police registration

Upon arrival in China, you need to register with your local Police station within 24 hours. If you stay at a hotel, the reception will take of your registration for you.

Once you have found an apartment however, you have to register at your nearest police station within 24 hours.

Please do this ASAP to avoid any fines (up to 2,000 RMB!). To register, you need the following documents:

Telephones

Using your own mobile phone with a foreign SIM card in Shanghai depends on your phone provider, but it will generally be very costly. The best solution is to buy a Chinese SIM card from either China Unicom or China Mobile. This does not necessitate a local contract as most SIM cards work according to a pay-as-you-go system and you can recharge your phone balance at virtually any small supermarket. Keep in mind however, that some providers only cover certain locations. To make international calls, you may need to have a certain balance on your phone card (usually at least 200 RMB) and register your phone number with your passport in a phone shop. You may need to unblock your smart phone to use that SIM card. You can avoid this by buying a cheaper phone in China for about 500 RMB and use this for the time that you spend in Shanghai. This may be advisable also due to the fact that smart phones are highly targeted by the pickpockets on Shanghai's underground system.

In areas with Internet connection you may also be able to use Skype to make inexpensive international calls. The quality is not always perfect but it works most of the time. We can assist you in buying a SIM card.

Banks

If you decide to open a bank account in Shanghai, it is best to choose an international bank such as HSBC where extra charges for using your card may not apply.

Alternatively, there are more and more online bank account providers in Western countries that offer credit cards with which you can take out money from any international bank free of charge. This is very useful when you are in China or travelling elsewhere in Asia.

Please make sure to increase the ATM withdrawal cap for your bank account before leaving your respective home country. Otherwise, you might not have access to sufficient funds during your stay.

Getting around Shanghai

For students studying in Shanghai for a whole semester, it may be worthwhile to purchase a Shanghai Jiaotong Card at underground stations which can be recharged with money and which you can use on all buses, the metro system and for most taxis. These cards are available for purchase at any subway station and in several convenience stores (NB: you have to pay a deposit of 20-30 RMB which you get back once you return the card).

Options for getting around in Shanghai include bus, metro and taxi. Taking the bus is a cheap option (2 RMB per ride) but levels of traffic in the city center are very high and so this may not be the best choice if you are in a hurry. All bus signs and timetables are in Mandarin only, and the drivers do not usually speak English or read Pinyin. However, you can plan your bus ride easily via the Google Maps, "Get Directions" option.

Often the metro is the most convenient method of transport with maps in both English and Mandarin. Metro tickets can be bought at vending machines. Therefore, remember to always carry plenty of small change with you. One ride costs around 3 RMB-5 RMB in the city center. You can avoid buying each ticket separately with the Shanghai Jiaotong Card.

ESSCA Shanghai is located in the HongKou district.

The nearest metro station is Line 10 “North Sichuan Road Station” (Chinese: 四川北路 pinyin: Sì Chuān Běi Lù).

Directions from SiChuanBei Road station to ESSCA: click here.

Taxis are in plentiful supply in Shanghai and are normally very cost effective but beware that during the hours of 11 PM in the evening and 5 AM in the morning, there is a 30 percent surcharge. Also, similar to the bus option, you may be stuck in traffic jams, especially during rush hour in the morning and evening. Furthermore, taxi drivers do not speak English and so you must either speak basic Mandarin or have your destination address written in Mandarin (characters, not only Pinyin!).

When hailing a taxi on the street or at a taxi rank there are several things to remember: cars belonging to bigger taxi companies are either turquoise or bright red and dark red taxis should be avoided. Taxi drivers also must display their ‘star rating’ on their dashboard which relates to the amount of experience they have and the level of positive feedback they have received from customers. Drivers with one star will recognize all major locations in Shanghai whilst drivers with three stars should also recognize less popular addresses.

Taxis in Shanghai are honest but a few scam cases have been known on the ride from Pudong airport - City Centre, and Station MagLev - City Centre.

The average price between Pudong airport and the city centre is 250 RMB. Always keep the receipt of payment.

For sports enthusiasts, Shanghai has all of the facilities expected in any major city worldwide. Events to look out for include Formula 1 and the ATP Tennis Masters.

Sports and other facilities are available in our partner university, Shanghai International Studies University. The university is located in HongKou district, not too far away from ESSCA. (Da Lian West Road, Hongkou Area /虹口区大连西路 550 号).The campus map is illustrated on this website: <http://map.shisu.edu.cn/en/> (please click the “campus” button to switch campus to Hongkou Area).

To make use of the SISU sports facilities as well as getting library access, you have to apply for a student ID card from SISU. We can help you with this. Please provide Carole ZHU with a passport photo.

Another option is the library of Alliance Française in Shanghai, which is located just one floor above the ESSCA Shanghai teaching site. As a student, your annual membership fee is just 50 RMB (you need to show your student card from ESSCA, your home university, or from Shanghai International Studies University). You need to leave a deposit of 300 RMB which you get back when you end your membership. The library has a collection of books, magazines, and DVDs which are mostly in French. They have some books dedicated to social sciences, including economics, and a good selection of French newspapers and magazines.

You may also use the Shanghai Library with a Library card, which you can apply for with your passport and a refundable deposit.

Nightlife in Shanghai is very lively and varied with affordable bars and busy nightclubs to suit everyone's tastes.

Food and Drink

Shanghai cuisine is characterized by its sweet and oily nature and because the name 'Shanghai' literally means 'above the sea,' steamed seafood is a popular dish. Dishes to look out for include 'xiao long bao' a steamed dumpling of broth and meat, 'zui ji' steamed chicken marinated in rice wine, and 'you tiao' a long deep-fried doughnut consumed with soya milk for breakfast.

The price of eating and drinking out in cafés and bars varies greatly depending on location. For a cheap meal try the areas around Wujiang Road; for something more expensive head to the Xintiandi region. An app called “大众点评” is very popular and useful to find restaurants you want. For the moment, there is only a mandarin version.

It is also worth noting that it is not advisable to drink the tap water in Shanghai. However bottled water is widely available and is not too expensive.

Climate

Shanghai has a humid sub-tropical climate and experiences all four seasons, with extremes of freezing temperatures during the winter and an average of 32° Celsius in the summer months.

Spring tends to begin around March with weather being very changeable in temperature and often rainy. Summer begins in June, often with heavy rain, but followed by two months of oppressive heat and humidity which can be difficult for tourists and those not used to such extremes of heat. Autumn is generally around September time; the weather will then be sunny and dry. Winter begins in December and the weather will become cold and grey. Snow is unlikely but the city does experience several Typhoon spells throughout the year.
