

MAJOR IN CONSUMER GOODS MARKETING

Become a Specialist in Consumer Goods Marketing Sector in Europe and the Far East

The ESSCA Master's Consumer Goods Marketing program aims at triple marketing and sales competency in the industrial, mass retailing and B2C sectors. It has close ties to French and international industry leaders such as Danone, Leclerc, Procter & Gamble, L'Oréal, General Mills and Samsung, among others. The program's pedagogy clearly bridges the gap between the theoretical and the practical — industrialists submit actual corporate problems to the students, who seek out solutions to these issues and make professional presentations to corporate panels, who then participate in the students' grading. In this way, master's students are not only highly-motivated, but also extremely involved in their own learning.

Clearly geared towards open-minded candidates who are seeking new methods, new activities, new ideas and new tools that they can develop in other countries, the program takes pride in its varied teaching approaches which include immersive games, corporate lectures, seminars and round table discussions.

Graduates can choose from a large range of professional sectors for future careers in marketing, sales and purchasing (product manager, market manager, market research manager, operational marketing, trade marketing or merchandising, e-commerce management, e-category management, as well as key account management and events organization and marketing). They may also wish to profit from ESSCA's links to the food, cosmetics and high-tech sectors.

Work and Career Perspectives

BRAND MANAGER

The Brand Manager works for the Marketing division. Their main objectives are to build a unique and creative brand identity while understanding the evolution of customers' needs and tastes. They are in charge of the brand development (range of products, packaging, promotion, etc.).

CATEGORY MANAGER

The Category Manager is in charge for the brand to promote its offer within retailers' stores so as to match the latter's clients' expectations while enforcing the brand marketing strategy. Their main objective is the satisfaction of both his direct client (the retailer) and the final consumer.

TRADE MARKETER

The Trade Marketer is in charge of operationalizing the marketing and the category management strategies at the point of sales level. Working with marketing agencies, he or she develops a series of promotional packages that can be deployed within the stores of a specific retail chain.

KEY ACCOUNT MANAGER

The Key Account Manager is in charge of the company's sales development with its main clients (key accounts). They also serve as a coordinator of the company's marketing and sales services so as to better serve these clients.

MARKET RESEARCH ANALYST

The Market Research Analyst collects and analyses data pertaining to specific markets or industries so as to help the marketing and sales decisions.
